The Ferryman

A ferryman lived in a village by the river. His life was hard, but he was happy. He had time to think and he learnt a lot about life from his passengers.

One day a city man got into his boat. He was wearing a smart suit. While the ferryman was rowing across the river, the city man began to speak.

‘Have you ever visited the city?’ he asked.

‘No sir, I haven’t,’ said the ferryman.

‘What!’ said the city man. ‘You haven’t visited Bombay?’

‘No, sir. I’ve never left this village.’

‘But life here is boring. City life is exciting. There are wonderful things to see and do.’

‘But I like the village life, sir. It’s peaceful and I’ve got everything I need. City life is stressful.’

‘But what can you learn about the world in this little village? Have you been to school? Did you study Geography or Science?’

‘Sci-hence? What is Sci-hence, sir?’

‘You don’t know what Science is? But scientists are extremely important people. I’m a scientist. You village people don’t know anything!’

The ferryman looked sad. He felt ignorant. Suddenly dark clouds appeared in the sky. ‘A storm is coming,’ said the ferryman. ‘Can you swim?’ The city man looked frightened. ‘Oh, no,’ he cried. ‘I can’t swim. I’ve never learnt!’
